KIN OF ORLAND BANKER KILLED

Orland Girl Seriously Injured In Head-on Automobile Crash

A Christmas excursion ended in death near Freeport, Ill., Tuesday morning when four persons were killed in a head-on collision. The dead are:

John G. Gee, 32 years old, of Lockport, Ill.

George Gee, 28 years old, John's cousin, also of Lockport, Ill.

Miss Myra Hassert, 25 years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hassert, 301 Dawes avenue, Joliet, Ill.

John D. Cook, of Rockford, Ill. The injured were Miss Lois E. Ludwig, 25 years old, of Orland Park, Ill., and Eyster Gott, of Burlington, Ia. Gott, his skull and both legs fractured, was not expected to live.

On Way to Minnesota

The Gees, Miss Hassert and Miss Ludwig, were on their way to Cottonwood, Minn., the home of the Gees' parents, when the accident occurred at 7:30 o'clock Tuesday morning. Cook and Gott were en route to Rockford, Ill.

There were no eye-witnesses to the accident, a head-on crash between the two cars at Pecatonica Corners on U. S. 20, halfway between Rockford and Freeport, Ill.

The impact of the crash threw both machines off the highway and into a ditch, scattering Christmas packages over the road and in the ditch.

Rushed to Freeport Hospital

Passing motorists summoned aid, and Miss Ludwig and Gott were brought to the Freeport hospital, while the bodies of the dead were taken to undertaking parlors.

Authorities surmised that the accident had been a head-on collision from the condition of the two cars, the front of the bodies of which were badly smashed.

Both cars, their wheels upturned, lay in the ditch when passing motorists stopped at the scene of the accident. The Gees, Miss Hassert and Cook were killed almost instantly, Miss Ludwig and Gott unconscious, sprawled in the snow-filled ditch.

Miss Ludwig to Recover

The Gees, stockholders in the Big Run golf course, where they both lived, had left Joliet early Tuesday morning for Cottonwood, where they and the two women were to spend the Christmas holidays with their parents. Cook was hurrying back from Burlington, Ia., to spend Christmas with his wife and 9-year old child.

According to attending physicians Miss Ludwig apparently will recover. She has a broken arm, severe cuts and bruises, and possible internal injuries. Gott had not regained consciousness at noon today.

George Gee, Jr., and Herman Gee of Orland, cousins of the dead men; Mr. and Mrs. Ludwig and Mr. Hassert were to come here to take charge of the bodies.

John Gee is survived by a mother and two brothers of Cottonwood, and a sister, of Minneapolis, Minn. George Gee is survived by his mother, a sister and two brothers, all of Cottonwood, two sisters in Texas and a brother in Montana.

Miss Hassert is survived by her parents and three brothers, Oliver, Raymond and Wilbur. Her father is a wealthy retired farmer.

Mrs. Matthew Ludwig, son Jeff and Mr. George Gee, Jr., cashier of the Orland State bank left shortly after receiving the message of the accident for Freeport, Ill.

The two Gee cousins killed in the crash are to be buried in Cottonwood, Minn., Sunday. Miss Hassert was buried at Joliet Friday.

Latest advices from the bedside of Miss Ludwig are that she is holding her own and that if she can survive the shock, she has a chance of recovering.

Serenade Frankfort Mayor With Carols

Mayor George Sangmeister of Frankfort was pleasantly surprised Monday evening when about fifty young folks of the village gathered before his home and sang Christmas carols and wished him a Merry Christmas.

Heavy Snow Keeps Plows Busy

The heaviest snow fall of the season swept this section Christmas Day. Snow plows cleared the paved highways soon as the snow fall had let up. Some of the side roads were badly drifted.

TINLEY XMAS SHOW WONDERFUL PRODUCTION

An audience estimated from 900 to 1,000 people attended the Christmas show sponsored by the Tinley Park Business Men's Association at the Tinley Park school auditorium last Saturday night.

The show opened with a talking movie entitled "Broken Dreams". This was a splendid picture and acted as an appetizer for what was to follow.

At the close of the movie the lights were turned out in the auditorium and colored flood lights were played on the stage. When the stage curtain rose a very beautiful eastern scene was revealed showing the camels, palm trees, the star which guided the Wise Men and over head appeared a beautiful array of stars in a typical night sky. These stars were formed of small electric lights.

The whole scene depicting the Christmas story was exceptionally beautiful and was much admired.

Postmaster Paul Rauhoff and Miss Stover acted as the readers and had a location on the sides of the stage. They read the Christmas story as the scene on the stage was revealed.

The old familiar Christmas songs and carols were sung by the school children with an organ accompaniment. The strains of the organ sounded as the coming from the distance and put on the real finishing touch.

Roman Gonia, the popular Tinley Park druggist sang as a fitting solo "Ave Maria" which was especially wonderfully rendered.

Clyde Rice served as the master of ceremonies.

In the final scene the kiddies had their inning when Santa Claus appeared with his sleigh and reindeer and called out a "Merry Christmas to All".

Upon Santa's arrival each child was presented with a bag containing candy, apples, pop corn, etc. The youngsters went into ecstasies of delight and all enjoyed a very wonderful time.

All present were unanimous in their praise of the Tinley Park Business Men for putting on this wonderful Yuletide show.

Much credit is due to Selby Hirsch for the stage arrangement and the colored light effects. He spent many hours in arranging the lights, scenery, etc. Credit is also due to the various members of the Tinley Park Business Men's Association for cooperating in producing the Christmas show. This is said to have been one of the best shows ever put on at Christmas time in Tinley Park. The Tinley Park Business men showed that real results can be accomplished by co-operation and deserve much credit for the fine production they offered the public who were equally as appreciative.

A huge electrically lighted and decorated Christmas tree decorated the front of the auditorium and gave a real festive Yuletide touch.

The children are also to be complimented for their excellent behavior in not making any undue noise which enabled all to hear the production without interruption.

MOKENA CHURCH GETS $2,350 CHRISTMAS GIFT

The St. John Evangelical church at Mokena received two very fine Christmas gifts by way of cash donations. The Women's Union of this church made a cash gift of $350 but the biggest surprise gift came from Wm. Junker of Orland township and a member of this church who made a cash gift of $2,000. The gifts are to be applied on the liquidation of the church debt.

Mr. Junker is widely known as the veteran rural mail carrier of Orland Park. He retired from the service sometime ago. He resides on a farm west of Orland Park on 143rd street.

Receives News of Brother's Death

Mrs. H. C. Scheiblich of Mokena received a message from Lincoln, Nebraska the past week saying her brother Louis J. Stoll died December 21.

Tinley Woman's Club Sponsors Xmas Program

On Wednesday afternoon, December 18, the Tinley Park Woman's club held their regular meeting in the M. E. church with Mrs. Alice Anderson, chairman of the American Home department in charge of the program.

The regular meeting was called to order by Mrs. Walter Bartlett, program chairman, in the absence of the president, Mrs. Omar Ebenhack who was in St. Luke's hospital in Chicago, following an operation.

Mrs. Bartlett read a Christmas greeting from Mrs. Ebenhack.

Mr. Brown Campbell sang two solos, "Little Bambino" and "My Task". Mr. Campbell has a fine tenor voice and his singing was much enjoyed.

Mrs. Anderson was presented by Mrs. Bartlett, who directed a Xmas Candle pageant. Six young ladies, wearing white gowns and each carrying a lighted candle came from the rear of the church, down the two aisles singing Christmas carols. After they reached their place in the front of the church, Mrs. Trudie Swisher, from behind the scene, read a Christmas story which was interspersed by the young ladies singing Christmas carols. It was a lovely number on the program and much enjoyed. Those taking part were: The Misses Helen Rice, Shirley Anderson, Jean DeVol, Mereda Robinson and Helen and Katherine Hirsch.

Mrs. Anderson introduced the Third district American Home Department Chairman, Mrs. Donald DeMuth of Chicago, who spoke of the department and the work planned for the year. A paper was read by Mrs. DeMuth which was given over the radio recently under the auspices of the Woman's club. It told of what a home should be, of the importance of wise, Christian women as mothers and home makers, and of the place the home has in the making of a country and the forming of character of children being reared in our homes.

At the conclusion of the program each member responded to the roll call by telling of some incident of Christmas in her childhood. Donations were taken which went to the making up of a Christmas basket for families of unfortunate conditions.

Tea was served in the dining room with Mrs. Chas. Nielson and Mrs. Frank Baldwin pouring. The room was decorated in the Christmas colors, with red paper curtains at the windows, lighted white candles in red celophane wrappings. The table was lovely with red point-sets in white wrappings and lighted candles.

Mrs. Rudolph Hug and Mrs. Irvin Stover were the hostesses.

Frankfort Buys New Fire Hose

The village of Frankfort has purchased 500 feet of new fire hose at a cost of $550 to replace a like amount of old fire hose which, according to Mayor George Sangmeister was ruined due to excessive heat kept in the village hall when Henry Johansen was living in the hall. An inspector from the state marshal's office inspected the hose and said that the heat and chemical reaction caused by fumes from an oil stove resulted in the deterioration of the rubber in the hose which had become so porous that it would hold water no longer.

LACK OF FROST PROTECTION CAUSES FREEZE UP

Lack of protection against below zero weather caused a water line to freeze along Niethammer avenue in Mokena shutting off the village water supply to a number of homes for several days. When the trench was dug for the new village water mains on this street by the PWA workers the water pipe was left unprotected resulting in the freeze. Oil was poured on the water pipe and fired and blow torches were used. The pipe was not thawed out until Tuesday afternoon. After the pipe was thawed out the trench was filled up with straw which was then covered with earth and the water users were asked to keep their water faucet partly open so a small stream of water is kept running to prevent another freeze. This is the second time that water pipes have been frozen due to negligence in not protecting the pipes against frost.

The trench along Niethammer street as far as the water line runs will have to be dug open again when the new water main pipes are ready to be laid. From present indications this work will not be completed for sometime due to the cold and heavy snow.

Tinley Man Wears Watch 42 Years

W. C. Hollstein of Tinley Park is now wearing a gold watch which he purchased of B. Balchowsky when the latter was in the general store business in Frankfort 42 years ago. The watch keeps good time and shows no signs of wear. It was guaranteed for 20 years but has over run this guarantee by 22 years.

Mr. Balchowsky had as his slogan: "Good Goods Always" and this slogan proved true.

Mr. Balchowsky passed away some years ago but his son Harry is now carrying on the business his father founded and is still adhering to the slogan used by the latter.

Old Age Pension Has Hard Sledding In Present Legislature

By Lottie Holman O'Neill

Under pressure from the Social Security Board at Washington, with the threat that no money would be available unless they were obeyed, the Illinois Legislature in special session has repealed the Old Age Pension law passed last June providing for a pension of one dollar per day, and substituted in its place Old Age Assistance with a maximum from the state of fifty cents per day and no minimum. If the Supreme Court sustains the federal setup for social security this state may secure an additional fifty cents per day and make it with state and federal aid one dollar. With certain minor provisions, then, if you are a resident of Illinois, have no property and no income and no children who can help you, have lived in the state five out of the nine preceding date of application, are an American citizen you may expect to share in the appropriation for this purpose. No one can tell you what you will get until all the applications are considered because the money available is to be pro rated among the entire list. If your children can help you, which will be determined by a welfare worker appointed by Springfield, whatever they can do will be deducted from what the state has to give you. The most concise way to state this is, that another Illinois Emergency Relief setup will take over the administering of assistance to old age and include in it the payment of blind pensions or assistance and aid to dependent children. Anyway, send your name to the Department of Public Welfare in Springfield and in time you will receive a blank to be filled out. After investigation and verification of your statements you will receive what the state has to offer. To those whose names I have I will say that your name is listed and the blank will reach you when the administration forces are at work.

The delay in the session has been due entirely to the reluctance on the part of members of both parties to submit to the dictates of Washington which were upheld by the governor. The rules are so drastic that I believe efforts will be made when Congress convenes to get the social security board to loosen up in their demands. When the facts are known as to the provisions of these social security bills and the pressure exerted to force them through the people will demand an accounting and payment will be made through loss of votes.

Unemployment Insurance
This bill was also drawn by the social security board without being submitted to anyone in Illinois representing either side to the controversy. Members of the House are hesitating to go on record either way because of lack of authentic information as to how it will work if enacted.

In addition to social security legislation some other subjects were included for consideration in this session. One was the Drivers License bill which is aimed to secure greater safety on the highway. You will recall that the usual bill calls for license cards to be issued after examination, a fee for same, etc. The present bill calls for the issuance of license cards, without fee, after examination, but with an appropriation of a half million dollars to administer same. This bill is not getting very much consideration. Another bill which seems to meet with some favor is House Bill No. 55 which gives the Secretary of State power to suspend licenses issued to any person convicted of driving while intoxicated or under influence of narcotic, or of reckless driving, or who has failed within thirty days to pay a judgement against him for damage caused by a car. This bill provides for no examination and no appropriation for administering.

It may be called and possible secure enough votes for passage.

The attendance at the session has been good considering that all the members find to do is to act as rubber stamps for Washington. A few are rebelling openly, the rest are making the best of what is to all a bad job.

Snow Ties Up Coach Moving

Work on moving the railroad coach from Mokena to the Lincoln Estates is being held up for the time being due to the bad weather conditions. The village is also requiring the posting of a cash bond for the use of the village street to the paved road. The coach was recently donated by the Rock Island railroad to the parish at the Lincoln Estates for use as a church. The coach has been taken off the railroad trucks and has been placed on rubber-tired moving trucks.

SYNOPSIS

As Alan Garth, prospector, is preparing to leave for his mining claim in the Far North, a plane lands at the airway emergency station. In it are Burton Ramill, millionaire mining magnate; his daughter, Lilith; and Vivian Huxby, pilot and mining engineer. Believing him to be only an ignorant prospector, the men offer to make an air trip to Garth's claim, although they refer to his samples of platinum-bearing ore as nearly "worthless." Lilith Ramill, product of the jazz age, plainly shows contempt for Garth. Through Garth's guidance the plane soon reaches the claim site. Huxby and Ramill, after making several tests, assure Garth his claim is nearly valueless, but to "encourage" young prospectors they are willing to take a chance in investing a small amount. Sensing treachery ahead, Garth secretly removes a part from the motor of the plane. Huxby and Lilith taunt Garth, but their tone soon changes when they try to start the plane. Returning to shore they try to force Garth to give up the missing part. Garth manages to set the monoplane adrift and the current carries it over the falls. He points out that he is their only hope in guiding them out of the wilderness. Garth begins the work of preparing for the long journey. He insists that the others help. Ramill and his daughter must be hardened for the hardships ahead in their trek to the outpost on the Mackenzie. Garth experiences difficulties in getting his companions into line. An experience with a bear helps. Returning from a long sleep in the woods, Garth finds the party has stolen the tea and sugar he has been saving for emergencies. He makes no objection, simply pointing out that he is accustomed to a strict meat diet, and that they are hurting only themselves. The work of getting ready for the trip continues. Huxby refuses to help, and works on the mining claim.

No man of the engineer's coldly calculating character would stop at anything, when the stakes of the game meant a placer worth a million or more. Mother Nature could now be counted on to keep the spoiled heiress in line. But the Wild would only sharpen and intensify the engineer's craft and avarice.

After eating his fill, Garth took to Huxby's bed, beside the smudge-fire. He awakened to find that the sun had taken its northern dip and was just slanting up again above the mountain crests. It had been under much longer than in June. The summer was getting well along.

Huxby had stayed on watch to keep the fire going. He met Garth's off-hand good morning with a show of civility. His cool reasoning had brought him to the realization that nothing was to be gained by upstaging Garth.

When Miss Ramill left the leanto, Garth stooped in under the low roof and began to rub her father's knees and hips. The millionaire groaned that he had been stricken with a terrible attack of lumbago and rheumatism. It was impossible for him to move.

Headless of the complaints, Garth rolled the complainer out beside the cold baked leg of moose. The "sick" man ate more than either his daughter or Garth. Afterwards, insistent urging and the promise of an easy work-out persuaded him to get on his feet. They wandered around through the woods, with frequent pauses in the glades.

When, several hours later, they returned to camp Miss Ramill had completed one moccasin and was doggedly stitching at its mate. Huxby came down from the trough with the gold pan. Garth melted the last of the moose fat in it and fried a heaping mess of mushrooms. For salad, he shook a quantity of pleasantly acid sorrel from the bottom of his pail. With berries for dessert, the meal became a banquet. While it lasted there was a general glow of good feeling. Even Huxby spoke pleasantly to Garth.

As before, Garth turned in at the same time as Mr. Ramill. He awakened to find the first pair of moccasins finished. The girl had met his terms.

He gave Huxby the moss bed, and started to collect flatfish stones as heavy as he could toss. When he had pitched a dozen or so upon the cache platform, he strung the smoked slices of meat on rawhide thongs. Raking aside the smudge-fire, he stood on the rack and tied all the meat close up under the cache platform.

He then climbed upon the platform and piled the stones on the tie-things where they came around the poles. That would keep wolverines or other pilferers from gnawing the rawhide to let the meat fall. No fourfooted creature could now get at the meat on the under side of the platform, and even ravens would have difficulty stealing much of it. To complete the job, Garth pulled off the cross poles of the smoke rack.

For breakfast, the party finished the baked leg of moose. As Garth had foreseen, his three city camp mates had developed camp appetites. Better still, they were less irritable. Their craving for drink and tobacco had begun to lessen.

At timberline Huxby went up the trough with the gold pan. Garth headed again for the glacier. This time Mr. Ramill did not pant and gasp so hard, nor did he have to stop so often to rest. The first climb had done more than strengthen his wind and flabby muscles. It had burned up the autotoxins in his system as well as sweat off many pounds of fat.

He managed to climb all the way to the lower end of the glacier. It took him less time than his part-way climb and he was far less exhausted. While he rested in a sunny nook on the rocky side of the lateral moraine, his daughter went down in front of the glacier with Garth. They came to the channel where the milky stream gushed out of a tunnel cave in the blue-white ice.

Garth pointed to a shelf of rock on the near side of the stream. He walked into the cave along the smoothly polished ledge. Lilith Ramill shuddered and glanced up fearfully at the steep over-hanging ice face that seemed about to crash down. Yet after a moment's hesitation, she followed Garth into the chilly blue shadow of the cave.

Several yards from the entrance Garth stopped before a narrow side hole that opened above a waist-high uprise in the bedrock. He reached in and picked up a bundled white skin. Out in the sun he opened the skin and showed a piece of frozen meat.

"How's that for cold storage?" he said. "Killed a young mountain sheep on my way out, last month. Thought I'd test the glacier. Looks as if it's a safe meat house. No chance of spoiling, and not even a wolf has ventured inside."

Miss Ramill said nothing. She saw no reason to consider the cave of the slightest interest. There was, however, the meat. She suggested that if it was not spoiled, it would make a change from the moose meat. This proved true. Down at camp the young mutton was first thawed in cold water, then stewed in the gold pan.

The descent had been made by Ramill without aid. There was no need to support, much less back-pack him. He had really begun to get a start in training. To Garth this was all the more reason for pushing the millionaire so much the harder.

In the week that followed, he alternated more climbs with trips around into the muskeg swamps. He led his sweating, swearing charge over niggerhead grass, where the heavy-bodied city man had to jump nimbly from one big tussock to another or take a tumble.

Miss Ramill tagged along on these grueling hikes. She also made another climb up the gulch. Garth cached in the cave the hundred pounds of smoked moose meat he had brought up on his pack-board. He then led on up the glacier, halfway from its foot to the top of the pass. That gave the three climbers some real ice work. Coming back, Garth knocked three brace of fool hens from spruce limbs with a stick.

The half dozen grouse made a pleasant change. But even with a pail of salmon berries for dessert they proved a scant meal for the four meat-eaters. The last leg of moose had already been baked and eaten, the tongues broiled, and the second muffle stewed. The remainder of the smoked meat would not last long. So far, Garth had not interfered with Huxby's all-day panning out of the platinum alloy. He had not even asked to look at the take of precious metal. Food was a different matter. Instead of shooting another moose, he called upon Huxby to join in a caribou hunt.

A band of the big animals had drifted along the tundra terrace over towards the glacier. Garth counted fifteen. He waited until the band came within seventy-five yards. He then led drive, shooting rapidly yet with careful aim. One after another dropped, each with a bullet through the head. The stupid beasts stared in the direction of the sharp reports. But they could see nothing. The sixth went down before the nine survivors wheeled and clattered off in panic-stricken flight.

The flaying was well under way when Huxby and Miss Ramill came hastening a-slant the tundra ahead of Mr. Ramill. The girl eyed the clean delicious-looking white fat on the first flayed body. "That looks good, Alan! Vivian, you can go back to your mining. Dad and I will help here."

Her father called out a panning suggestion for Huxby to wait and carry down a load of meat.

"No need," Garth said. "Don't stop, Huxby. Most of this venison is going on ice. None will be allowed to spoil."

The engineer did not linger. He had looked none too well pleased over the girl's familiar use of Garth's first name. Along with his displeasure about this, there could be no doubt of his eagerness to get back to the platinum panning. Each successive day he had shown himself still keener to continue the sampling of the placer.

When Garth finished the flaying of the caribou, he started to dress out the bodies. Greatly to his astonishment, at the cutting up of the second caribou, she took the belt-ax and began to help. Mother Nature had cracked the polished shell of artificiality in which the pampered heiress had been encased. The girl's few days in the Wild had awakened primitive instincts ground deep into the nature of woman during the remote past of mankind. Down through countless ages her prehistoric ancestresses had learned the bitter lesson that, in the Wild, days of plenty are certain to be followed by days of famine. The cave man hunted the meat; the cave woman hoarded what she could of it against the time of want. Otherwise her children starved.

So, upon reflection, Garth's amazement passed. He had managed to cover it, even at the first, when Lilith Ramill took the belt-ax in her slender hand and severed the neck bone of the caribou with a single blow.

Her father was the one who stared. He sat watching the girl's quick, eager wielding of the hand-ax, his mouth slack, almost agape. Garth could only surmise how she had always been coddled and pampered. Her father knew it. He knew how, since her childhood, she had been wrapped about with silken luxury, waited upon by attentive servants, petted and spoiled.

The millionaire had been born on a farm. He could recall seeing his mother help butcher sheep and hogs. But she was a farmer's wife. Lilith would not have known how to prepare a spring chicken for the pan. And now she was cutting up caribou.

Aside from an occasional word of direction, Garth said nothing. When he finished dressing out the fifth carcass, he handed his knife to his eager helper, packed a load of meat, and carried it to the ice cave.

Down in the gulch bottom he chose a pothole stone that would hold perhaps three quarts. In the bowl he coiled a wick of twisted dry caribou moss, piled in caribou fat, and lighted the wick. When the fat melted, the wick burned with a strong steady flame. Caribou ribs furnished a grating on which to broil steaks. The fat meat was deliciously tender, its flavor between venison and beef.

When even Mr. Ramill could eat no more, Garth carried the stone lamp into the ice cave. Upon his return, he had Mr. Ramill and Lilith look close at the caribou skins.

"You see they are hair, not fur. But every hair is hollow. Nothing is warmer than a caribou parka. In fact, the winter coat is too warm to be worn. That is why I killed six now, instead of one. You have never wintered in the North."

Mr. Ramill tensed as if prodded. "Wintered? You can't mean to infer you expect to stay on here. We have your promise to take us out."

Garth turned to meet the intent gaze of the girl's blue eyes. They looked as cold as the blue ice of the glacier tunnel. None the less, they had greatly changed since he had first seen them, over on the Mackenzie. They no longer showed a trace of their former cynical tiredness. The girl might be as hard as ever, but she was no longer bored or ennuied. For another thing, she had begun to lose her excessive thinness.

He answered her father: "You have my promise—more's the pity. A winter a la Eskimo would be a wonderful experience for Miss Ramill. However, she will of course prefer to go back to jazz and cocktails, to paint, powder and lipstick."

She flared: "And rid of you!" "To be sure. That above all else," he agreed. "So how could I deprive you of that pleasure, or fail to give your father and your fiancé another chance to bask in the sun of my placer claim? I agreed to get you back to the Mackenzie. When we reach the old post, we part company. You and Huxby will then be free to go as far as you can."

"But in that case—No, you can't make me swallow it. I know you're not such a fool as to risk losing that placer."

Garth laughed outright.

"What d'you take me for? Your brand of gold-digger? Gad, that's the nubbin of it all. It's the reason why men like you and Huxby lose out. You worship the golden calf. Yet what value is there to riches other than what you get from them? Can you think of a more enjoyable game than playing draw poker, with our lives in the jackpot, and Fortune dealing us the cards of chance?"

"What's the catch?" inquired Miss Ramill, with a sudden upwelling of her sophisticated cynicism. "Lives in the jackpot—that means nothing. It's your placer that's in the pot. What stakes do you consider we have in to balance it?"

"That would be telling," he teased. "You'll know if I win. If I lose, it will not matter to any of you what you've risked. The showdown may come sooner than I expected. Your father is already in fairly good shape. We'll start the trip out as soon as these caribou skins have been tanned."

CHAPTER VI

Hell in the Muskegs.

Garth sat beside the camp fire, sewing new moccasins for himself. Nearby, the millionaire dealer in mines and his fastidious daughter scraped the raw sides of the six caribou skins and rubbed them with the tanning mixture of fat, liver and brains. Garth had told them they could either tan the skins, or wait for him to do it. Until the tanning had been finished, the trip out would not begin.

Mr. Ramill was so keen to start back for civilization that he went at the disagreeable task with energy and determination. Lilith not only worked as vigorously as her father, she showed a real interest in the tanning.

Huxby took no part in this preparation of the skins. When he came down to the camp from the platinum placer, the sight of his fiancée's doing such squaw work struck him speechless. He stared in blank amazement. When at last he found his voice, he started to threaten Garth:

"You've gone a bit too far, you roughneck. Stand up, or I'll kick you up. I am going to—"

The girl broke in, with cool scorn: "Tune off, old dear. You're set on static. It's not interference we want. Dad and I are giving this performance under our own direction. You see, it's a bargain. Alan agrees to start our trip out just as soon as these skins are all tanned."

The mining engineer drew back. "So soon as that? My dear girl, if he's going to rush us off, I don't see how I can spare any time here in camp. I haven't yet sampled all the area of the placer."

Manure Most Important in Aiding Plant Growth

The chemist's analysis of a short ton—2,000 pounds—of well rotted barnyard manure reveals that it is made up of 1,500 pounds of water and 500 pounds of dry matter. This 500 pounds of dry matter contains approximately ten pounds of nitrogen, five of phosphoric acid, 13 of potash, eight of lime and five of sulphur—a total of 41 pounds of chemicals—plus 459 pounds of organic matter, or "humus." In addition, asserts an authority in the New York Times, it contains a supply of certain bacteria and other microscopic organisms which are essential in effecting changes in the soil—the "breaking down" of chemical compounds existing in the soil into simpler and more soluble forms.

In other words, manure is so valuable in gardening because it provides, combined in this one substance, three distinct soil aids: first, small amounts of the main plant food elements (nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash) and also of lime (not a food element but a "digestion accelerator" in the plant's diet); second, a supply of humus or organic matter which helps to change any uncongenial, unresponsive soil into moisture-holding, friable, productive loam; and, thirdly, an active, thriving population of bacteria beneficial to plant feeding and plant growth.

Pressed Wood

Pressed wood, especially the tempered grade, has almost unlimited uses in home improvement and decoration. One woman used it effectively to replace the bottom of a piano bench that had fallen out long ago; and now the music is no longer scattered in window sills and on chairs. This same material was used to cover the unsightly top of a general utility table. Made entirely of wood and being warp-proof and moisture-resistant, pressed wood is sturdy; it yields easily to the saw and does not chip or crack under pressure of nails or screws.

U. S. Public Health Service

The United States public health service official seal bears the date of its origin, 1798, when it was known as the Marine Hospital Service. The present name was authorized by congress in 1912.

Lesson for December 29

REVIEW: SIGNIFICANCE OF THE EXILE AND THE RESTORATION

GOLDEN TEXT—The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children, Psalm 103:17.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How God Restored His People.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How God Restored His People.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Learning From Great Men.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God's Providence in History.

The method of review must be determined by the teacher. The grade of the class, the aptitude of the scholars, and the genius of the teacher are features to be considered. For senior and adult classes, the following suggestions are made.

I. Study the Lessons of the Quarter as Illustrating the Philosophy of History in God's Dealings With His People in Their Captivity and Restoration.

Assignment of topics should be made at least one week in advance. Only adult classes could be expected to use this method. The following subjects might be assigned:

Why God permitted Israel to go into exile.

What cure the exile effected for Israel.

What changed views of life resulted from the exile.

The bearing of the exile upon prophecy.

The relationship of divine chastening to divine love.

II. Character Study.

Assign the outstanding heroes of the quarter's lessons to members of the class to have them report. This assignment should be made at least one week in advance. Some of the outstanding characters for consideration are Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Nehemiah, Ezra, Zerubbabel, and Malachi.

III. Summary of Contents.

This is a method readily usable at all times, and it can be adapted to most of the grades. The following suggestions are made for the carrying out of this method:

Lesson 1. The prophecy of Isaiah is the grand center of the Old Testament. It pictures the Servant of Jehovah, with great wisdom, gloriously executing the divine purpose of redemption, at the cost of great suffering.

Lesson 2. Before he was born, Jeremiah was ordained by God as a prophet to the nations. He so really took to heart the doom which awaited his people that he wept sorely.

Lesson 3. Jeremiah stood in the gate of the temple in order that the multitudes might hear him. He told the people that God required them to amend their ways, solemnly warning them of impending judgments.

Lesson 4. While Belshazzar and his lords were engaged in drunken revelry, the mysterious hand recorded the divine judgment. There is a coming day of judgment.

Lesson 5. Because of Judah's apostasy, God permitted the Babylonians to destroy Jerusalem and take the Jews into captivity.

Lesson 6. Ezekiel sets forth personal responsibility. On his part, it was to hear God's word and to sound forth the warning. The people's responsibility was to hear and obey.

Lesson 7. Though Israel went into captivity as a chastisement, in due time God will make good his covenant agreement with the Jews.

Lesson 8. God used these prophets to stir up the people to build God's house.

Lesson 9. Ezra was commissioned to lead the people to forsake their sins and return to God.

Lesson 10. On hearing of the distress of his brethren in Jerusalem, Nehemiah took the matter to the Lord in prayer. The Lord gave him favor with the king, permitting him to go back to build the walls of Jerusalem, bearing credentials of authority from the king.

Lesson 11. The method used in bringing the people back to God was the reading of the Word of God to them. Because the Word was made plain to the people, they repented of their sins.

Lesson 12. Malachi, as an aid to Nehemiah in effecting reforms, pointed out the sins of the people. He set forth a day of judgment when righteous retribution would be meted out to the wicked, and rewards given to the faithful.

We have now concluded our months of study in the Old Testament and will with the new year enter upon a study of the Gospel of Luke.

A Man

O rich and various man! thou palace of sight and sound, carrying in the senses the morning and the night; and the unfathomable galaxy; in thy brain, the geometry of the city of God; in thy heart, the power of love and the realms of right and wrong!—Emerson.

Work

Thank God! Work is sorrow's cure, its hands like the hands of an enemy, but its voice the voice of an Eternal Friend.

A Dressy Frock Fitting Budget

PATTERN 9545

"As easy as pie" to fit between two graceful raglan sleeves, a wedge-shaped yoke is a distinguishing feature of this rather dressy, yet inexpensive afternoon frock. You'll find it hard to decide which sleeve treatment is the more charming, the one that tapers to a snugly buttoned cuff, or the one which stops just short of the wrist. Don't forget to note the very new, gored skirt with its subtle flare. If it's a dressy dress you want, black satin is ideal; but if you're out for color, choose a richly hued novelty synthetic.

Pattern 9545 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32. Size 16 requires 3½ yards 39 inch fabric and ¾ yard contrasting. Complete diagrammed sew chart included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 232 West Eighteenth St., New York, N. Y.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

National Topics Interpreted

BY WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Washington.—In our discussion last week of the problem facing the new session of congress, space was devoted to the Townsend

Bonus Will Pass

$200-a-month old age pension plan. Next to the Townsend plan, probably the hottest potato confronting the administration and congress is the soldiers' bonus. It is on the doorstep and one not to be dodged. Unless all signs fail, congress will pass a bill providing for immediate cash payment of the bonus—and President Roosevelt will sign it.

At the present time the total number of bonus certificates in force is approximately 3,500,000. They have an aggregate value of about $3,500,000,000. But from time to time congress has enacted legislation permitting the veterans of the World war to borrow money from the government on these certificates and figures supplied by the Veterans bureau here indicate that these loans total about $1,700,000,000. Thus it is made to appear that if congress provides for immediate payment of the bonus and the President approves, there will be a new drain on the treasury of approximately $1,800,000,000. While there is no connection directly between the Townsend plan and the soldiers' bonus, the two programs are linked in one way: each proposes to take money out of the federal treasury.

Withdrawal of further money from the United States treasury for whatever purpose becomes an important question at this time because our nation now shoulders the greatest debt it has ever known. Within the last week, the treasury has borrowed an additional $900,000,000 and at the same time it refunded about $480,000,000 more. Refunding is simply paying off one bond by issuing another so that the financial transaction in the middle of December involved almost $1,400,000,000 and when that job was completed the debt of the United States reached a new peak of $30,500,000,000, or $240 for every man, woman and child of our 120,000,000 population.

Now, $240 may not seem like much of a debt for each person to assume but its payment—and debts have to be paid—devolves not upon 120,000,000 people but upon a considerably less number. The national debt, therefore, must be considered from the standpoint of the burden it places upon a comparably small number of people—those who pay the taxes.

Payment of the bonus or the Townsend old age pensions necessarily must add to that debt.

Will Add to Debt

While there are many authorities who insist that the national debt can go much higher without impairing the value of the bonds the government issues, the fact cannot be disputed that any additions to the present financial burden reduce the possibility of early payment of that debt.

Then, the question of its maintenance becomes important. The debt bears interest which must be paid every year. On the present basis, the interest on the national debt alone approximates $750,000,000 per year and that interest results from probably the lowest rate we will see for many years. Indeed, the chances are that any future borrowings or refundings will have to be accomplished at interest rates higher than the government now is paying and that means, of course, an increase in the annual interest charge.

Whatever the merits of either the Townsend old age pension plan or the cash payment of the bonus, the fact remains that congressional approval of either one or both necessarily means the piling up of additional debt. I know that the Townsend plan supporters contend that the old age pension can be made self-sustaining but it is a physical impossibility for it to be self-sustaining in the first few years of its life and that obligation necessarily must be assumed by the treasury. There is no provision whatsoever for raising the money with which to pay the soldiers' bonus. It will be simply a cash outlay by the treasury if congress orders it done and the treasury either must have new taxes or must borrow the money. There is no possibility now that either congress or the President will propose seriously the laying of new taxes to meet the bonus payment because, after all, 1936 is an election year and President Roosevelt is seeking re-election.

The history of the soldier bonus fight is one revealing consistent opposition by Presidents to its payment.

Fought by 4 Presidents

From the time it was first proposed in congress in the administration of President Harding, no President thus far has been willing to support it. Harding, Coolidge, Hoover and Roosevelt, up to this time, have fought payment of the bonus in a lump sum. Each had his own reasons but each reached the same conclusion, namely, that it placed too much of a drain on the treasury and consequently too much of a burden on the taxpayers of the country. Each President has held it to be class legislation—appropriation of funds of all for the benefit of a few.

With the advent of the Roosevelt administration and its New Deal policies many recommendations were made and acted upon appropriating money from the general treasury for the use of a single class. The public works and relief funds, appropriated to keep people from starving, falls within that category. No one disputes the necessity for feeding the destitute; no one argues against providing food, clothing and fuel for those unable to care for themselves and no one can take issue with the fact that when states and cities were unable to care for their destitute, the federal government was compelled to step in. Nevertheless, general funds were used for a limited number of the population.

That fact is probably the most influential at the present time when the soldiers' bonus and the Townsend old age pension problems are before congress. With few exceptions, I have found representatives and senators saying that it is difficult to reconcile support for the gigantic relief appropriations and at the same time refusal of support for the other two.

The Roosevelt administration likewise finds itself in difficulties in expressing any opposition to the soldiers' bonus because of the admitted waste that has gone on. It has added more than $8,000,000,000 to the national debt since March, 1933, and the most friendly of administration critics admit the wastage has been substantial.

Speaking of the administration's political efforts to maintain or increase party strength, Washington observers are now convinced that the President will depend upon the South and the West for re-election. If these observers are correct in their analysis of the early campaign methods, Mr. Roosevelt is trying to align agriculture and labor as the foundation stones for a vote victory. It is a most interesting circumstance, politically. It is the first time it has been attempted by the "ins" and it will add something to the knowledge of politicians if it works satisfactorily.

Campaign Plans

Heretofore, attempts have been made many times by the "outs" to align labor and agriculture to defeat the party in power. It has always failed. So that if it can be accomplished by the party in power, there will have been demonstrated how the use of public money combined with favorable legislation of a class character can be employed to maintain control of the government.

There is every reason to believe that "Big Jim" Farley, postmaster general, chairman of the Democratic National committee and chairman of the New York State Democratic committee, is not hopeful of winning the East with the possible exception of his home state of New York. Of course, Mr. Farley will not admit the truth of this statement nor will any of his subordinates make a confession that the East is turning against the President and the New Deal. Such an admission would wreck state organizations of his party, so he glibly insists that Mr. Roosevelt will carry as many states as he did in 1932 but the undercurrent of events and plans of the Democratic national committee indicate otherwise.

The success of the administration's plan to mold agriculture and labor into a cohesive political framework is going to turn largely on what the Republicans do. Thus far, it can be said that the New Deal plans for aligning labor and agriculture are moving forward quite undisturbed. The reason is the sleepiness and cowardice of Republican leadership. It has done nothing on this score showing either initiative or courage. Of course, the Republican strategy appears to be one of delay in order to avoid an early counter attack from the New Deal but political observers here—men who have studied politics for a quarter of a century and more—fail to understand why the Republican National committee is not active in raising money for the forthcoming battle.

Sleepy Republicans

If the Republicans expect to make an appreciable dent in the New Deal armor, they must go to the country. If they expect to hold the East where business leaders admittedly are anti-New Deal, the arguments why they should adhere to Republican policies must be advanced continuously. If they expect to make any gains in the Middle West or in the Pacific coast area, their side of the story must be told to the voters. As I said earlier, little if anything is being done in this direction—so little in fact that an unbiased observer fails to see how Mr. Farley's statement that Mr. Roosevelt will carry as many states as he did in 1932 can be disproved.

It is generally understood that a reorganization of the Republican National committee will take place very soon.

THE NEED OF LETTERS

Immediate cash payment of adjusted service certificates can only be accomplished through the cooperative efforts of all veterans, the members of their families and those who are friendly to the cause of veteran welfare. In the face of organized opposition from anti-veteran groups and administration leaders, it is obvious that the ex-service men of this country have many tremendous obstacles to overcome if this appeal for justice is to be crowned with victory.

The theory of strong organization among veterans is both sound and logical and with ample precedent. Business men have their various civic clubs and the United States Chamber of Commerce. The farmer has his Grange and his agricultural clubs. The factory owner belongs to the Manufacturer's Association. The laboring man is thoroughly unionized and banded together with his fellow workers in the ranks of organized labor. The churches have their ministerial societies as well as their local, state and federal councils. Those who deal in stocks and bonds, and handle the gold and credit of the nation, are represented by the American Bankers' Association. In every walk of life you will find 100 per cent organization and coordinated action.

As members of veteran organizations, we represent organized voting groups. A greater membership in veteran organizations, means that the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States and other veteran fraternities can speak in behalf of a greater number of taxpayers and voters. When our representatives plead at Washington the consideration we receive is measured by the numbers we represent. Our contacts are necessarily with public officials. Public officials have the utmost respect for those who wield the ballots. This respect naturally increases in proportion to the number of ballots represented by the group that is speaking.

In this fight for immediate cash payment of Adjusted Service Certificates, a large and powerful membership is our most potent weapon. We are dealing with practical politicians. We must talk to them in the only language they can understand. I call upon every member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States to regard himself as a membership committee of one. We must lose no time in signing up those comrades who have been hitch-hikers in the past. The time has come when every veteran must pay his share of the freight and contribute his bit to the building up of an organization that is constantly on guard in behalf of his interests.

There is a second and equally important phase in this fight for immediate cash payment of Adjusted Service Certificates. Congress must understand that the public as a whole is in sympathy with this demand for an immediate settlement of this obligation to the veteran. Congress will so understand if everyone who favors immediate cash payment of adjusted service certificates, will write to his representatives in Congress to that effect. "Everyone" means business and professional men, merchants, store-keepers, your neighbors, friends and the members of your family. If every member of the V. F. W. will make himself personally responsible for the sending to Congress of five or ten or twenty-five letters and telegrams in support of the payment of the bonus, the members of Congress will be left in no doubt as to the wishes of their constituents on this vital subject. Such a total of millions of letters will be unmistakable evidence to Congress of the overwhelming public sentiment on the part of the people back home who will remember what happens to this measure when they are called upon to register their approval or disapproval at the next elections.

We call upon all veterans, as well as our friends, to write letters to every member of Congress from this district. These Representatives and Senators may be favorably committed at this moment. But there is always the danger they may change their views at the last minute. It is up to us to remind them that we are watching them constantly—that we are depending upon their votes in the House or the Senate when this measure comes up for action.

Every member of Congress pays particular attention to the letters that he receives from the voters in his district. It is generally conceded in Washington that one letter expresses the views of at least one hundred other voters who think along the same lines. Members of Congress may regard some of their duties rather lightly but they never fail to answer a letter from a voter.

These are the two most important things that you can do personally to help accomplish immediate cash payment of Adjusted Service Certificates. You can assist in building up the membership of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States and give to our leaders at Washington the opportunity of speaking for a group of voters whose numbers command respect. You can write letters to the members of Congress from this district, and make certain that every member of your family does likewise, and that your friends and neighbors take similar action. Explain to your landlord, your grocer, your dry goods merchant and the other business men of your community what the payment of this obligation means to you personally. Point out how it will benefit them. Convince them that a letter to a Congressman on this subject will bring results that are just as important to them as they are to you.

In demanding immediate cash Adjusted Service Certificates the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States is asking only for the justice accorded the fighting men of other nations more than fifteen years ago.

Only One Objective

The demand that the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States is making for immediate cash payment of World War veterans' adjusted service certificates is not qualified by any requirement concerning the method of that payment. As individuals and as an organization, we are entirely willing to leave that matter in the hands of Congress, where it belongs. The committees in both houses of Congress that have to do with the appropriation and raising of funds for all government expenditures, have the experience and the information necessary to enable them to solve this problem more efficiently than any layman.

No veteran or organization sincerely in favor of the payment of the bonus will endanger its passage by attempting to dictate to Congress the method of payment. So far as the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States is concerned, any proposal along this line that has the approval and support of a majority of the members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, will have our support. We intend to play ball with our representatives in Congress. We are asking for their votes in behalf of immediate cash payment of the bonus. We are willing to give, in fair exchange, our support to any method of paying that bonus that is preferred by Congress as a whole.

Ever since the passage of the Adjusted Service Act of 1924, our organization has opposed the twenty-year postponement of the cancellation of this just debt to America's World War veterans. For more than ten years, the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States has continuously and consistently advocated and tirelessly worked for the enactment of legislation that would effectively cause to be paid to the veterans of the World War, the balance due them, together with the cancellation of interest being charged upon advances made on their adjusted service certificates.

Through the efforts of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, the justice of this cause has become better understood and more popular throughout the United States. Primarily through the endeavors of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Congress, in 1931, liberalized the laws relative to the adjusted service certificates by making available to all holders fifty per cent of the face value of the certificates. Later legislation reduced the interest being charged by the government upon such advances.

At this moment, victory is nearer than ever before. Success is actually within our grasp. This is no mere idle hope or self-delusion. The history of the bonus battle within the last twelve months is sufficient evidence of the fact. Every veteran in the country knows that the bonus bill was passed by an overwhelming vote in the House of Representatives, over the President's veto, and lacked only nine votes to override that veto in the Senate. We know that leaders in both houses have agreed that the bonus question will be one of the very first pieces of legislation to be considered when Congress convenes again this winter.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States is mobilizing all its strength for this last great drive. We are determined that no possible obstacle shall be left in our path to complete success. Every member of every one of approximately 3,300 local units throughout the country, is united in this final, concerted big push towards the objective we have sought for the last ten years. We are resolved that no touch of overconfidence, no slightest weakening of our determination shall risk the success of the bonus measure in this last moment of battle.

In this spirit, the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States has issued to that other great veterans' group, the American Legion, a cordial invitation to join our efforts in behalf of immediate cash payment of the adjusted service certificates to the end that our common objective be attained.

Immediate cash payment of the balance due World War veterans is deserving of the active support of citizens in all walks of life and business men in every line of endeavor. This money, placed in the hands of veterans, immediately will be turned into every channel of trade, for the payment of back rent, grocery bills and other debts. For this reason, if no other, it behooves every business man and every veteran to give this demand for cash payment his active support.

Governor Horner announced that despite efforts of the Works Progress administration to reduce the relief load, Illinois will have to support 130,000 families after January 1, with only $2,000,000 a month in state funds available to meet estimated monthly requirements of $5,000,000. The announcement was made after the governor conferred with Chairman John C. Martin, Executive Secretary W. S. Reynolds and other members of the Illinois Emergency Relief commission at Springfield.

Mrs. Mary L. Bilderback, sixty-nine years old, sister of Martin (Farmer) Burns of Omaha, Neb., one time wrestling champion, died in the St. Joseph hospital, Aurora. Mrs. Bilderback was the widow of Gabe Bilderback, former Chicago merchant.

Sheriff Michael J. Breen of Will county was fined $50 at Joliet by Circuit Judge William R. Hunter of Kankakee on a contempt of court citation. The action grew out of a report made to the judge last week that jury summonses had been served on 30 men, which turned out later not to be wholly true.

Nantucket Island Talks About Secession

RESIDENTS of Nantucket island are talking of secession, if not from the Union, at least from the state of Massachusetts. They say they are "disgusted with the present operations of government" and would manage better if left alone. Bassett Jones, at right, a New York electrical engineer and summer resident of the island, is one of the proponents of autonomy or a territorial status for Nantucket, which he says was never legally joined to Massachusetts. Above is a view of the densely populated island.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

LIGHTFOOT HEARS A DREADFUL SOUND

DAY after day Lightfoot, the deer, played hide and seek for his life with the hunters who were seeking to kill him. He saw them many times though not one of them saw him. More than once a hunter passed close to Lightfoot's hiding place without suspecting it.

But poor Lightfoot was feeling the strain. He was growing thin and he was so nervous that the falling of a dead leaf from a tree would startle him. There is nothing quite so terrible as being continually hunted. It was getting so that Lightfoot half expected a hunter to step out from behind every tree. Only when the Black Shadow wrapped the Green Forest in darkness did he know a moment of peace. And those hours of safety were filled with dread of what the next day might bring.

Early one morning a terrible sound rang through the Green Forest and brought Lightfoot to his feet with a startled jump. It was the baying of hounds following a trail. At first it did not sound so terrible. Lightfoot had often heard it before. Many times he had listened to the baying of Bowser the Hound, as he followed Reddy Fox. It had not sounded so terrible then because it meant no danger to Lightfoot.

At first, as he listened early that morning, he took it for granted that those hounds were after Reddy and so, though startled, he was not worried. But suddenly a dreadful suspicion came to him and he grew more and more anxious as he listened. In a few minutes there was no longer any doubt in his mind. Those hounds were following his trail! It was then that the sound of that baying became terrible. He must run for his life. Those hounds would give him no rest. And he knew that in running from them he would no longer be able to watch so closely for the hunters with terrible guns. He would no longer be able to hide in thickets. At any time he might be driven right past one of those hunters.

Lightfoot bounded away with such leaps as only Lightfoot can make. In a little while the voices of the hounds grew fainter. Lightfoot stopped to get his breath and stood trembling as he listened. The baying of the hounds grew louder and louder. Those wonderful noses of theirs were following his trail without the least difficulty.

In a panic of fear, Lightfoot bounded away again. As he crossed an old road, the Green Forest rang with the roar of a terrible gun. Something tore a strip of bark from the trunk of a tree just above Lightfoot's head. It was a bullet and it had just missed Lightfoot. It added to his terror and this in turn added to his speed.

So Lightfoot ran and ran, and behind him the voices of the hounds continued to ring through the Green Forest.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

WINTER ENTERTAINING

FOR the average housewife elaborate entertaining is not to be thought of, not only because of the expense but because of the amount of labor involved.

When serving an informal tea for club or committee the wise woman will provide herself with plenty of the good sized heavy paper napkins to use instead of the cherished linen, which is used for more formal occasions.

Napkins of paper now come in large sizes and one may even have an initial to make them more personal. Nobody enjoyed the small and elusive paper napkins, for they never "stay put," but these are such a comfort and saving on linen.

There are so many kinds of sandwiches that may be served with tea or some other hot drink, that one might have a different one every day for years.

Small cookies and cakes are always popular, make them unusual, either by filling them with some soft filling of fruit or custard, or sweetened and flavored whipped cream.

The very small cream puffs filled with good thick sweetened and flavored whipped cream are most attractive and universally well liked. Serve them on a lace paper-covered plate in twos or threes; when accompanied by a cup of hot cocoa, what could be more dainty for a light afternoon refreshment?

There are so many food accessories now which add to the enjoyment of serving simple foods. The frying basket for potato nests—they are so simple to make, using a fine shredder in the form of a flat grater, making the fresh potato in such fine shreds that the basket when cooked even looks like a nest. These may be made and heated before serving. The baskets may be filled with the most delicious sweetbreads and mushrooms, or creamed chicken, or with any creamed vegetable one desires.

Old Street Car Is a Good Clubhouse

THIS unique clubhouse is a discarded street car in which members of the Home Makers' club of Atlanta, Ga., hold their regular meetings. A completely furnished kitchenette may be seen at the back of the car.

A SCHOOL

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I WOULD have a school
A place for labor,
Yet I would always have
Play for its neighbor:
Touch this thing with romance,
And that with glamour,
The history of France,
A Latin grammar.

I would have a school
A place for dreaming,
Not only teach the true
But teach the seeming:
The world needs dreamers, too,
As well as heroes,
And Shelleys something do,
As well as Neros.

I would have a school
A place for winning
More than a little lore—
But the beginning
Of many books to read,
And much endeavor,
A school a thing to lead
The mind forever.

TRY THIS TRICK

ACROBATIC MATCH BOX

AN EMPTY match box is the apparatus required for this surprising trick. The magician exhibits the box; then places it upon the palm of his left hand. It lies there until he says the magic word.

Then the box slowly rises upward. It sinks again at command. Then it rises. Finally the wizard removes the box and passes it to the baffled spectators. They find it to be an ordinary match box.

Here is the secret: In placing the box on his left palm, the magician sets it upside down. Moreover, he pushes out the drawer a trifle forward. In closing the drawer, he pinches a bit of flesh at the base of the fingers.

The simple process of stretching the fingers or loosening them causes the match box to rise and fall. At the finish, the right hand moves over and opens the drawer as it removes the box from the left.

London Fog Flare

London police are testing this new type of fog flare which is intended to replace the old acetylene flares. It is worked from gas mains, and can be folded up and put away in a metal box sunk in the street.

Pique Buttons

The striking feature of this black wool crepe street frock worn by Virginia Reid, screen actress, is the clever pique buttons which trim the bodice. The pique, a waffle-weave, is corded to form the round buttons which are themselves ornamented with pique "wings." The same fabric forms the muffler collar. Though the frock is cut in one piece, it is styled to give the effect of a jacket in the back. With the frock she wears a peaked hat made of a ribbed black crepe.

"There should be a Pulitzer prize or something of the sort," says goofy Gertie, "for that one person that makes the first page of a newspaper during the year without the aid of the police."

Think to Our Utmost;
Then We Can Seek Help

Thinking is only one aspect of mental activity and mental activity is only one aspect of vital activity. Life must go farther than mere thinking can carry it. It cannot stop where thinking stops. Then what is to be the guide of life when thinking fails to be a sufficient guide? Is there to be no guide at all? A negative answer is too often given, and hence the confusions of the hour. But there is no justification in thought or anywhere else for the negative answer. Thinking stops very often before it needs to stop. It ought to proceed as far as it can, and when it does so it sees the reasonableness of seeking help beyond itself.

DOAN'S PILLS

MRS. McCrery swept the snow from the steps of her boarding house with vicious strokes, all the time keeping up a stream of grumbled protests about everything in general.

"A fine start for a New Year. Work, work, work, same as last! Hang that confetti, how it sticks! What is there to life, anyway? Work all day, and half the night, and for what? What difference does it make that I'm alive? Nobody cares. What do I do that's worth while? Nothing! Might just as well be dead."

She had come to the end of the walk, and now she knocked the snow off her broom and turned back. "And I thought once that some day I'd be a great lady," she snorted. "Humph!" The door banged behind her with a dull thud.

All morning Mrs. McCrery spent in a maze of abuse and self-pity, but when lunch time came she bethought herself of Dora Pike, third floor back. "Poor chick," she thought, "no work yet. I'd better fix her up a bite to eat." She set a tray and covered it with a clean napkin.

"Shame on me," she went on, as she climbed the stairs, "grumbling at my work, when that poor girl would give her arm for a job. Guess she isn't everything she would like to be either, but she doesn't go around bawling like a calf. She's an inspiration, that's what

"Me?" "Yes. I Was Feeling Sorry for Myself."

she is, and this coming year I'm going to try to be more her way. If I had to put up with what she has to, maybe I'd have some right to mope and complain."

She paused, panting, and then knocked. "Here's just a bite—" she began, as the door opened. "Why, what's the matter?"

Dora Pike's eyes were red with weeping, and now they brimmed again. "Oh, it's you, Mrs. McCrery! Come in," she said. "I'm in a bit of a funk," she apologized, "what with New Year's and all. In fact, I would have ended it, if it hadn't been for thinking of you."

"Me?" "Yes. I was feeling sorry for myself not having any work, and so on, and then I thought of you and how brave you are about all the things you do have to do, that I was right ashamed of myself. But I don't know what I might not have done, if there hadn't been you to think about."

"Well, dearie," said Mrs. McCrery, as she gathered the girl in her arms, "maybe that's what we're here for, darlin'."

NEW YEAR'S and PUBLICITY by Luella B. Lyons

"YES, Margie dear, you are looking at half a million geraniums that will be bursting into bloom one of these days and as far as I know, you and I and maybe a few folks here in Boone will see them. No advance orders for them!" and Bob Marchant's face was the picture of woe.

"But you only tried selling them the order in one city, Bob," Margie reminded him.

"It Worked, Bob—My Plan Worked!" She Exclaimed.

"Darling, this is New Year's day and a time for making fresh starts. I've an idea for getting an order for the whole lot and to Ripleys at that, but don't ask me what—just trust me and hope for the New Year changing our luck, darling!"

That evening Margie spent an hour or so over a letter which she addressed to the "People Say This:" department of the Crandall newspaper.

The next day Margie insisted on hanging around the green house until Bob nearly went mad with her persistence. Then a long distance call did come through from the buyer at Ripley Brothers' store.

"Marchant, say, have you still, by any chance, got that prospect of half a million geraniums, and can you be sure to have them ready on a day we will later specify—in full bloom by then? We've just picked up a rip roaring idea for decorating the outside of the store with them this spring and here's hoping to high heaven we can still engage them at that date. Name your own price."

Bob, happy as a lark, scarcely knew the buyer had broken the connection for Margie was dancing about wildly yelling—"It worked, Bob—my plan worked!"

"Margie darling, I've just had one grand and glorious shock but I'm not fool enough to think I earned it. I know the answer, so spill the first half of the story, honey—quick!"

"Bob dear, I wrote in to that column as though I was some great landscape artist. They published the letter and Ripleys took the suggestion to heart. You see, I said it was a shame that the stores out here in this section of the country didn't ape the big stores where I hailed from, decorating every window of their stores with window boxes piled high with gaudy red geraniums through the spring months and summer, too, and with green and red everlasting shrubs the winter through—just like so many do in France. I went into detail even, but that doesn't matter now. They took it to heart, engaged your whole crop just so you and I can take our 'geranium honeymoon'!"

Golden Phantoms

FASCINATING TALES OF LOST MINES

© W.N.U. By Editha L. Watson

THE LOST FIND

THE Funeral range of mountains, east of Death Valley, conceals a lost mine known as the Find. A man named Smith was its discoverer, and he went to New York with the first of his new wealth, spent it lavishly, and at the end of two months died of apoplexy.

He left a map, a fairly accurate one, showing the eastern part of Death Valley, and in the northernmost range of mountains a canyon had been drawn in detail. Near the head of this canyon a red cross marked the Find.

Basing their itineraries on this map, many people tried to reach the mine, but with no success. Then a "location notice," written peculiarly and apparently designed to give clues only to those who knew which were real and which false directions, was unearthed from beneath a location monument where the copper camp of Greenwater stands. The notice read as follows:

"Notice is hereby given that we, the men that wrote this notice, is over the age of twenty-one and are citizens of the United States, Cuba, and the Philippines; we do this day locate one gold mine. Known as the Bryfogle, and more particularly described as follows:

"Commencing at this big monument of stone on a cold rainy night and running 35 hours with Indians after him, come to a big canyon that leads up to the north with two big rocks on one side of the mouth of the canyon, the one on the right round and smooth, and the one on the left rough and rugged. These rocks stand 20 feet high. Follow up this canyon about five hours on burros or one and one-half hours on horseback you will come to the fork of the canyon. Take the left hand one and ride hard for two hours and you will come to an old stone corral. Go to the right of this about 9,000 feet and you will come to a small gulch leading up to the right. Go up this about one-fourth of a mile you will come to a small water hole. Sometimes it's a dry hole. If it's a water hole when you get there, water your animals, fill your canteen and then go on until the gulch forks again, then take the right hand one until it forks, then lead up the left one just a little ways and you will discover the find we have been unable to locate. The canyon is yet, and we take this means of locating the big find. The map of the above described property will be furnished to anyone on application to the undersigned. Located this first day of January, 1902.

"Locator,

"J. W. Trotter."

"P. S.—Don't look for this mine in the summer time, as it is dangerous. Doc."

That the monument where the notice was found formed the starting place, is apparent. But so far no one has managed to run as if chased by Indians until he finds the canyon with the two big rocks. Plenty of men have tried it, though.

SWIFT SILVER MINE

THERE seem to be three distinct Eras in America during which mining was most important. The first was during the Spanish occupation, the second after the Civil war, and the last the present time. But the Swift silver mine belongs to none of them; it produced its silver shortly before the Revolution.

Swift was the captain of a sailing vessel of those times. He met a man who had been adopted into an Indian tribe, and this man revealed that the Indians had discovered a fabulously rich deposit of silver in Kentucky.

The mine was in a cave, well hidden from the casual searcher. It was all that had been promised, and Swift set to work mining and smelting the ore, running it into molds and stamping it with a dollar die which he had brought with him. When they had made as much of this money as they could carry, they concealed the place as the Indians had done and started eastward—none too soon, for the tribesmen discovered that their mine had been plundered and started on their trail. In fact, pursuit grew so hot that the white men were forced to bury a large proportion of their spoils, escaping with enough, however, to be put into circulation. This money was known as "Swift's dollars."

Then came the Revolutionary war, and Swift was busy with many matters. We next meet up with him when he came into Kentucky with Boone, and told the story of the Indian mine at Boonesborough.

He said that he could find the place again, although his sight was failing, and a company was formed to go with him. He led them truly, and at last toward evening one day he recognized the location. The night was spent in dreams of great fortune, and at daybreak everyone was eager to uncover the hidden shaft—but alas! during the night Swift's eyesight had left him completely, and he could not see even the sun as it poured its rays against his face.

He tried to tell the men where to go, but it was useless. They were forced at last to abandon their search and return home empty handed.

That mine has been hunted ever since those days, but it remains hidden.

Records of Achievements

More names, dates and records of achievements are carved in the rocky cliffs of the Dog river near Beirut, Syria, than in any other spot on earth. For the past 3,000 years this gorge has been a favorite pass for armies marching between Africa and the East and few conquerors, from the pharaohs of Egypt to the marshals of France, have failed to leave inscriptions on its rocks.

Intermarriage of Normals Strengthens Race, Claim

Dr. Olga Bridgman, of the California university clinic, claims to have made studies which prove that intermarriage does not weaken the race, but strengthens it. If cousins who are both mentally and physically normal marry, she says, the children will tend to be even better mentally and physically than the parents. But, on the other hand, if the parents are below normal mentally and physically, then the children will be even less intelligent and less healthy than the parents. Intermarriage increases the predominant traits and so either improves or weakens the race dependent upon the original stock.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Irish Lads Find Black Paint Conducive to Rest

Two Irishmen roomed in an eight-story apartment, on the top floor, and could not sleep on Sunday morning as the sun would shine in the windows and wake them up. They bought some black paint and painted the windows and lay down to sleep. When they woke up, they realized they would be late for work, as it was 7:15. They rushed to their jobs, and the foreman looked at them in bewilderment. Pat says:

"Faith, and what's the matter, boss? We're only 20 minutes late."

Says the foreman: "Twenty minutes? Where were you Monday and Tuesday?"—Wall Street Journal.

Freedom Is Right and Power to Do Your Duty

Those who are crossing the threshold of manhood or womanhood should meditate on the two paradoxes which seek for solution—the paradox of Authority and Freedom, and the paradox of Right and Duty.

I should sum up the first by saying "Freedom is not the right to do what you like, but the power to do what you ought," and the second in the words "No man has any rights save one—the right to do his duty."—Sir H. Stuart Jones.

Christmas - 1935

Christmas lives in the hearts of men.
That is why it is so calm, so comforting,
so natural a celebration.

Christmas marks a return to the simple faith and the simple wisdom of the humble. Its spirit finds expression not in the loud and glittering phrases of the economic prophets, but in the quiet deeds of the silent and the obscure. It is a period of calm and reverent peace.

America, at this tide in her affairs, can welcome such a pause. A renewed reliance, however brief, on the deeper wisdom of the heart, may restore to us a lost sense of values.

In such a period we may regain for a while some of the things our fathers knew and we appear to have forgotten.
We may learn again to value truth above phrases; to value directness and simplicity above shrewdness and complexity. We may learn again to think of fellow-Americans as men and neighbors, rather than in terms of classified groups.

In it we may revive that tenderest of emotions—human compassion—instead of relying on government alone to help those who have suffered misfortune.

Christmas lives in the hearts of men
—but it is hard to keep the spark aglow in hearts made sick by promises unfulfilled, by hopes aroused, then left to perish. It is hard to retain that spirit where the basis of compassion is a graph or an Approved Plan rather than a depth of human sympathy.

To those who can help, Christmas, therefore, becomes a personal responsibility as well as a joyous festival.
The Christmas message, "Good will toward men," is a call to our compassion as well as to our faith.

T Y O TATTTLER

Well you basketball fans, we have some good news for you. You will be able to witness the initial contest of the season on Friday night, January 3. We have lined up two teams from New Lenox for opposition. There will be one girls and and one boys games. So remember this date and come out and see some real basketball.

Then on January 14, the Tinley teams will play return games at New Lenox.

Well folks I hope you haven't forgotten about the swell radio the T.
Y. O. is going to award to some lucky person. Why can't it be you at the school auditorium Saturday night, Dec. 28.

It looks like "Clark Gable" Siemsen has been slipping and "Cops" Klepper is beating the "Great Lovers" time. "Cops" seems to have the Christmas spirit and was "Ginger" surprised when she received a beautiful gift from the one-and-only
"Cops" Klepper.

Why does "tough guy" Ryan wait till 9 o'clock before going over to his girl friend's house? What's the matter Eddie, can't you neck with the folks around?

Nielsen, Klepper and Lehman went to Frankfort with three girls last Sunday night. It looked bad for "Cops" chances when "Ozzie" (the killer) started necking with "Cops" girl friend. Is that why you bought the present "Cops"? It also looked like Nielsen was trying to beat "Olie's" time with Rice and who was left, "Cops" Klepper and his old standby "Maggie."

We'll see you all Saturday night at the school auditorium.

Alas, One Rich Man Only!

All the Ships She Wants
Senator Borah's View

Only one solitary American citizen had a net income above $5,000,000 last year, and they were 50-cent dollars. The man did not realize it, perhaps, but he will realize it later
as inflation, which is now a fact, becomes known to all.

unfriendly, melancholy five-million-

may not be told.
The law forbids

you there is one and only one.

That "last rose" of depression's summer must look around him, sad-eyed, mourning over his old companions,
withered and strewn.

What is important today may be nothing tomorrow; what was nothing yesterday may become all important now. Once man was helpless without his horse, camel, ox, yak, ass, mule, reindeer, dog sled or tame elephant.
Now, in civilization, they mean little, while Lloyd George tells you, "Oil is the decisive factor in the Abyssinian campaign." Of all the great powers whose attitude is being canvassed, that of King Gasoline is most important.
Without oil, Mussolini cannot win his war; with oil, victory is certain.

Japan at the naval conference will consider nothing less than a battle fleet as big as any the United States may build; no 5-5-3 ratio.

No American should object to that, if Japan can afford it. It is not the size of the fleet that counts. Unfortunate Spanish grandees in charge of the great Armada could testify to that, after they met Elizabeth's small fleet and big sea captains.
